About the Building Performance Association

The Building Performance Association (BPA) is a membership-driven industry association dedicated to advancing the home and building performance industry by delivering improved energy efficiency, health, safety, and environmental performance through industry partners.

BPA was formed through the re-alignment of three organizations. Efficiency First, Home Energy Magazine, and the Home Performance Coalition (which was the merger of Affordable Comfort, Inc. and the National Home Performance Council) into now the newly formed association.

Our Members Are

BPA represents all aspects of the home and building performance industry. Our membership categories deliver value added-benefits and services, targeted to the goals of a business or organization and its individual employees. Our goal is to continually enhance the value we bring to individuals so they can grow professionally, and to companies to expand business opportunities, and ensure the customers needs are met. Our members range from the companies that sell and market products and services—B2B or B2C, individuals directly servicing businesses and consumers, organizations such as utilities along with their employees, testing and training centers, schools, and government entities. Rising professionals are a key member group, and we are beginning to develop programs to inform, educate, and provide leadership training for our industry’s rising workforce.

Engagement Through Membership

BPA offers two membership classifications, Company or Individual. Each offers benefits and services specific to the needs of the members. Company memberships are extended to 5 employees and focuses on your entire business and its goals and objectives for the industry.

The Individual memberships targets one person’s focus on growth, education, and training.
